Fried Chicken...Brown Liquor

THE SOUTHERNER aims to tell the kitchen table story of the Appalachian families who moved north to live in Michigan in the 1950's seeking work in the auto industry. It's a story many people with roots in the American South know. Cooking is serious business in the South and it left a huge impact on every relocated son and daughter of the south as their mothers and nanas cooked for them growing up.

Please know what we take great care and pride to source our ingredients from small, family owned businesses like Benton's Country Ham in east Tennessee and Anson Mills in Columbia, South Carolina, who make a strong effort to promote the culinary traditions of the American south. The majority of our products are sourced in west Michigan from producers like Evergreen Lane Farm, Hasselman's Honey, and Louise Earl Butcher, family farms that produce wholesome and healthy meats, fruits, and vegetables, and other foods from well stewarded farmland.

Thanks and enjoy.
